THE TRIMMING YOU REQUESTED turned out well considering I'm new to such things. Still it leaves me with a few questions. For instance, why do any of this by hand? If I had used the lawn mower on the hedges then they would be lower in the first place. Okay, sure, they would be really low, but think how much fuel we'll save over the long run. Right I know, keep doing it by hand and there'd be no use for fuel, but you need to think more openly, even radically. The entire grounds would have a much lower appearance, almost like a flat-top haircut. You know, like barbers used to give. Except, instead of centimeters, think in terms of acres, basically the entire grounds cleaned up real tidy in a mannered level shape. Now, the watering instructions all made perfect sense considering the roses have been moved to a new area. Keep in mind, as a reluctant groundskeeper, my laziness is of a proportion that can modestly be described as epic. Like, do you really expect me to water in such warm weather? Seems only logical that

Keep in mind, as a reluctant groundskeeper, my laziness is of a proportion that can modestly be described as epic. Like, do you really expect me to water in such warm weather? Seems only logical that roses could lift a finger and turn on the water themselves. If they really need it that much. Or how about this: the watering system could be activated by cell phone! You know, make a call and the system turns on. Of course I couldn't do that though. Aside from being a lot to ask, you don't pay me enough to afford a cell phone so naturally I couldn't activate the system. Oh I see, if you added me to the group plan, the phone for the roses would be cheaper. But we're getting a little off topic and the issue remains how inefficient the entire process is. I mean, first of all, you didn't even plant this stuff to begin with and you're definitely not going to live forever. No matter how much I snip on top, these roots aren't going to go anywhere but down and out. The hedges are here to stay so back to radical ideas, some real rethinking. What if we flipped the entire thing, brought up the dirt and paved it all. There's a free park just down the road, don't forget, and that's a plenty good place to see some green and save on all this maintenance. I realize I just talked myself out of a job but like I said, I'm new to such things and am inclined
